Carnival Village welcomes you

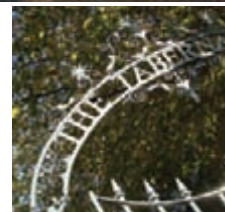

Carnival Village Trust is London's agency for the promotion, delivery and support of Carnival Arts.

We operate two venues in West London, The Tabernacle in W11 and the Yaa Centre in W9. We also represent four major partners – The Association of British Calypsonians, Ebony Steelband, Mangrove Steelband and Yaa Asantewaa Arts.

To help in the delivery and promotion of Carnival Arts, we are seeking submissions from artists, individuals and organisations that can be staged at the Yaa Centre, the sister venue to the Tabernacle. If you have an innovative, creative, carnival related event that requires performance space without venue cost, we'd love to hear from you. It can be dance, theatre, spoken word, calypso or steelpan ... we are open to ideas. Contact tara@carnivalvillage.org.uk for more details.

A History of The Tabernacle

Timeline compiled by Tom Vague and Piers Thompson

1800s

1869

The 'old tin Tabernacle' was established on Talbot Road by the Protestant evangelist preacher Gordon Forlong.

1883

Lord Shaftesbury laid the foundation stone of the current building.

1888

The Romanesque red brick and terracotta Talbot Tabernacle was completed. The building has been described as 'the Taj Mahal of North Kensington'.

1900s

The originally upper-middle class Powis Square went into social decline and acquired a multi-cultural reputation, encompassing Jewish and Indian communities.

1950s

Powis Square became the centre of Peter Rachman's slum empire, the West Indian blues club scene, and the 1958 Notting Hill race riots, in which the area was attacked by fascists and Teddy boys.

1962

Brian Jones of the Rolling Stones lived on the west side of Powis Square.

1963

As Rachman's slum empire hit the headlines in the Profumo affair, Michael Winner's 'West Eleven' film featured Powis Square scenes.

1965

The Tabernacle appeared in the swinging 60s film 'The Knack', Malcolm X visited the area, and Michael de Freitas became known as Michael X.

1966

The London Free School launched Notting Hill Carnival with the first procession, organised by Rhaune Laslett. Muhammad Ali visited the area, Pink Floyd went psychedelic in All Saints church hall, and Nancy Sinatra was photographed by a Powis Square street sign.

1968

The Powis Square gardens were opened as a playground by hippy community activists. 25 Powis Square starred as Mick Jagger's house in 'Performance'. In the 70s the Globe bar on Talbot Road was frequented by the Stones, the Beatles, Jimi Hendrix, Bob Marley and Van Morrison.

1971

Lemmy made his debut with Hawkwind in Powis Square during the Carnival.

1973

Councillors were locked in at All Saints hall on Powis Gardens and forced to listen to locals' demands, which included opening the Tabernacle as a community centre. After the Powis Square bonfire night party, the Tab church was occupied by 'hippy types' for its first community gig.

1975

The Tabernacle closed as a church and was taken over by the Council. Demolition plans were thwarted ➡

THANK YOU!

From everyone at Portobello Panto.

Because of your support in 2014, we exceeded all expectations in raising an impressive £6,449 for Great Ormond Street Hospital and Shepherds Bush Families Project!

by a community campaign, which enlisted the support of the police and the Home Office to get the Tab Grade-II Listed building status.

1976

Corrugated Times promoted the Derelicts at the Tab and Powis Square was visited by Marvin Gaye.

1977

The Raincoats' debut gig was a Tabernacle benefit. Wilf Walker's Black Productions put on a Tab benefit gig headlined by Aswad at Porchester Hall and the first gigs on the premises. As the Tabernacle became the focal point of the local black community in the late 70s, the music changed from Protestant hymns to Rastafarian reggae at a Legalise Cannabis Campaign benefit by Moa Anbessa and the Mighty Observer sound-system Dub club.

1979

At the end of the 70s Joe Strummer of the Clash appeared, at the time of 'London Calling', as part of the Ladbroke Grove All Stars reunion of the 101'ers.

1980s

In the early 80s the Tab hosted gigs by Misty in Roots, Pearl Harbour and George Melly.

1988

In the Tabernacle's centenary year, Joe Strummer reappeared with his post-Clash group Latino ➡ Rockabilly War. As the Tab became West London's premier rap venue there were some early hip-hop pronouncements from the pulpit by the Krew and JC001 and a graffiti workshop.

1990s

Out of Ray Jones's Roughler cabaret nights at the Tab came the Notting Hill Panto, featuring such local celebrities as Keith Allen, Andrea Oliver and Anna Chancellor. Lily Allen made her stage debut at the Tab in an early 90s panto.

1993

After the Tabernacle Arts and Community Centre went bankrupt, the Council took over the running of the building and Gill FitzHugh was appointed director of the Tabernacle Trust.

1994

The Tab Rwanda benefit gig featured All Saints, Don-e, Osibisa and Ebony steel band. The centre also hosted the launch of the Rolling Stones' 'Voodoo Lounge' album and a Right Said Fred gig.

1995

Plans were announced to return the centre to community control and upgrade the building. Mr C of the Shamen made a donation from the profits of 'Ebenezer Goode' to the North Kensington Sports Academy at the Tab, run by the boxer Tyrone Forbes

1996

The Tabernacle Trust received a £3 million Lottery grant for refurbishment as an arts centre and permanent Carnival base, and a further £1m from City Challenge, RBKC and charitable trusts.

1998

The building reopened, featuring a new hall, bar, studios, the Tablet gallery, and the Good Cook restaurant, run by Allegra McEvedy from Robert de Niro's Tribeca Grill.

1999

The Tabernacle was awarded the RBKC environment award for restoration and conversion, and officially launched by Vanessa and Richard Branson, Mick Jagger, Jerry Hall and the Duke of Gloucester. ➡ 20
